                     Moment of Silence

MOTION TO APPROVE THE MINUTES PASSES BY SENATOR OWEN

Communications:

1. Visitors Open Forum: Ruby Beauchamp, Eco Action Campaign
   - Eco action stickers encourage mindfulness around sustainability on campus
   - Started by the Ecology Club, now under ASUP's Sustainability Action Committee
   - Asking for ASUP to get the campaign going by taking a pledge to take eco action, publishing it, & encouraging friends to do the same – similar to the ASL ice bucket challenge
   - Goal: spread the eco action pledge across campus
     - Example: pledging to eat vegetarian every weekend
   - Is the eco action pledge on the stickers? (VP Gallagher)
     - I will email out the pledge and surveys to take and respond by Friday in order to post eco information with Senator profiles on screens across campus (Speaker Boos)
     - Part of the pledge is calculating your ecological footprint – calculated in earths (if everyone lived like you, we'd need _____ earths to sustain us). The pledge is not represented on the stickers, which is why we need your support in spreading the word
   - Can you talk about your overall strategy and goal? (Pres. Nath)
     - I envision that the campus culture of UP shifts to become more eco-friendly without imposing huge costs on the university. I want to directly involve students to encourage them to take on sustainability as their own personal thing and integrating it into their day-to-day lives. It's about making small shifts in people's thinking and mentality in how we think about our relationship with the Earth.

- I've heard that in the dorms they have problems with recycling lately – would it be possibility for the Sustainability Committee to partner with the Sustainability Coordinators in the dorms? (Sen. Mathias)
  - I'm hoping to have the CAs and RAs adopt the campaign as well. The campaign involves everyone – Kirk in Bon App, Andrea in Physical Plant, professors, faculty/staff
  - One of the members of the Sustainability Committee is starting a project in Shipstad to differentiate between different types of recycling in the dorms, which we're hoping to expand across campus (Sen. Moore)
- One way to make sustainability more prominent on campus is connecting sustainability to different clubs and areas – gender & race, immigration, engineering projects, art

2. Guest Speaker: Fr. Jim Gallagher, Campus Ministry Director

Introduction:
- Came in 2015 to be the Director of Campus
- On campus interest survey in Campus Ministry put Catholicism as the highest followed by other Christian denominations and then others/no religion
- Campus Ministry staff's description of Campus Ministry: provides opportunities for all members of the community to grow in awareness of God's presence and God's invitation to communion (comes from the Catholic tradition). For Christians this includes growing in the capacity to know, believe, and live out the Good News of Jesus Christ. This flows from our grounding in the Catholic tradition inspired by the charism and spirituality of the Congregation of Holy Cross.
- We want to offer opportunities to engage everyone from all faith beliefs – everyone belongs, including nonbelievers
- The different offerings we have hit on different outcomes – there's no one outcome for all
- We didn't want to become a program-based ministry. Instead, we give responsibilities to staff and find programs that fit in that way
  - Veronicca Bathon: Campus Minister for Faith Formation → opportunities for students of all faith backgrounds
  - Annie Boyle: Program Director for Retreats & Student Development → opportunities for Christians to come together on campus
  - Alex Roth: Campus Minister for Evangelization and Catechesis → opportunities for Catholic students – prayer specifically
- We're always trying to find ways to do things better – become more efficient → reevaluate small programs and try to meet more people with what we're offering
- Also working on greater collaboration among the members of Campus Ministry as well as across campus - for example, Residence Life, the Health & Counseling Center
- Student Leadership Cabinet: new in Campus Ministry – meets once a month each semester to talk about what's going on in each offering/area

- I'm hoping to provide students greater ownership of their faith – owning their faith here and develop a foundation so that they can carry it with them when they graduate from UP
- I always welcome feedback in terms of things you think Campus Ministry needs to address that's missing and ways to collaborate more

Q & A:
- I've seen successful collaborations between Campus Ministry and the Moreau Center and I've been really impressed with how that's cast a broader net, specifically in residence halls, catching students that didn't know how Campus Ministry overlaps with other areas on campus. I think a lot of students base their perception off of what they hear about Campus Ministry, like Encounter or hall mass. I'd recommend continuing that kind of collaboration (Sen. Owen)
    o There's something about sharing a space that things start happening
- One thing we were talking about in our Diversity Committee meeting and focusing on is having interfaith dialogue. Opus Week had a meaningful event on campus with the interfaith service in the Chapel. Muslim students have told me that for them, that extending of their faith in the chapel space made them feel like Campus Ministry was not what they perceived it to be originally. I think putting that more at the forefront and using ASUP as a tool to spread the word about events like that would mean the world to students who come from different faith traditions. That'd be a really great way to make Campus Ministry more of a relatable place for students who might not identify as Catholic (Pres. Nath)
    o I think you're right and that's one of the things on my mind – what are the ways that we can draw wider swaths of the community together for conversations and prayer. I'd love to do something – have a panel conversation and find some of these areas of connection. To have different religions talking about what we understand mercy, peace, and God to be. Some of these themes that aren't necessarily about being right or wrong but about our different perceptions. There's a lot of room for that and lots of great ideas – how are we going to do it in terms of planning, but also inviting people in.
    o I think ASUP is a great resource for that. With our broad network, we can be a tool for identifying students of different perspectives (Pres. Nath) o That's the key thing – bringing people together and if you do run across a student who's Hindu, for example, we can use our resources for them. With the Jewish Student Union, we helped reserve spaces for them. So for students and groups on campus that are here but don't feel like anyone really cares about them, we are happy to use what we have to create spaces for people to worship and talk well, and find other resources.
- In regard to making Campus Ministry seem more welcoming to students of different religious backgrounds – there is a perspective that the language used by Campus Ministry is very Catholic and Jesus Christ-heavy, which is understandable as a Catholic university, but that's one of the biggest things I've heard from students of non-Catholic backgrounds. Also, more explicit support for other religions on the website (VP Gallagher).

- How do you view Campus Ministry supporting non-Catholic and Catholic students whose views are not in line with the magisterium? For instance, isn't there a pro-life organization under Campus Ministry? Is there a Catholics for Choice organization under Campus Ministry as well? (VP Gallagher)
  - No, but if somebody is interested in that, we can have a conversation about it. I think the challenge is how do we represent what the Church is teaching but also let's have conversations that create the space for a mutual respect and good articulations of the different perspectives. We are a Catholic institution so we'll come from a certain perspective, but it's also recognizing that there are different perspectives – we need to make sure that the facts are understood and that we're clearing up misconceptions. I want this to be a space where people can ask questions and have conversations. I'm not interested in silencing all conversation that doesn't agree with the Catholic Church. Young people are suspicious of institutions, so going in and saying that the Church says this so do this won't work, but young people are looking for inspiration, for meaning and purpose. It's through searching and conversations that people will come to a kind of appreciation and understanding of what they know to be true.
- As someone who wasn't raised Catholic, I've struggled when there are scandals about abuse that come out in the Church. One of the ways I would love Campus Ministry to engage the student body is to open dialogues about that. It's hard to process and go to a Catholic school knowing that these abuses are happening (Sen. Krigger)
  - What I've heard from Catholic students is that it's really helpful when they go into church services and talk about that – it'd be helpful to involve the entire student population, beyond mass (Speaker Boos)
  - Let's do this – it needs to be talked about. It's hard to know what students are thinking. I knew these things were hard on faculty, but I couldn't gauge where students were at or what the right timing was. If you have ideas about how we can do this, like a listening session, I'd love to hear it.
  - At Loyola Marymount University Irish Catholic artists came in with art pieces displaying art in their student center that spoke to the abuses within the Catholic Church. You don't necessarily need to have a forum or dialogue, there are a lot of different avenues to start this kind of dialogue (Ryan Thoms, proxy for Sen. Kasper)
  - I think you're right – doing something more on display, creates an acknowledgement in a broader way.
  - Also it might be useful to partner with different clubs on campus, like SASA (Sen. Moore)
  - I'm very interested in doing that.
- One of the things that I really like that you've said is that we need to create a dialogue, a conversation. But from my understanding, Catholic Church positions are usually nonnegotiable in regards to the magisterium and the catechism. Does the dialogue have undertones of evangelization or of trying to show someone the teachings of the Catholic Church? How do you craft the conversations to be genuine but honest to the fact that we're a Catholic university with certain beliefs that are nonnegotiable to a certain extent? (VP Gallagher)

- You're right – there are certain things that are bigger than we are. With the magisterium to the Catholic Church, there's 2,000 years of history. It's being fine-tuned in the understanding of how it's being applied today, so we don't get to determine truth, but we can determine how we live out these things in our day-to-day and relationships. How does the University of Portland live these guiding principles out in our day-to-day and how do we do that in a way that's not oppressive, but helping people live in that? There's the teachings of the Catholic Church but each individual can decide to take it as it is or wrestle with it, which can be understood better through conversations. Let's start with the values and have conversations about the finer points. We've got to be able to sit down and understand each other, have conversations, and come to a deeper respect of each other as well as a greater understanding of our beliefs.

New Business: Proposed Bylaws Update, Senator Owen

- Through revising the Bylaws of the Constitution there are discrepancies between what's written and what's being practiced
- Bylaws: the government practices → Senate duties
  - No explicit mention of Senator projects – only implied
  - Outlined duties: meeting attendance, two weekly office hours, meet weekly with constituents, present constituent reports at the meetings, Molly Hightower service event each semester
  - Students have an issue in knowing what ASUP does → need to have an explicit requirement to do projects in order to have the infrastructure set in place and document and measure projects
- To be added to the Senate Bylaws under Article 1, Section 2 (Senate Duties)
  - What other university student governments do: require that student government members measurably complete a project and show what they've done in order to run for another position
  - If we're not doing this for the money or because it's a fun thing to do, we should be doing it to achieve projects with tangible results for the student body. We shouldn't feel entitled to continue in these positions without measurable success in projects
  - The completion of a project shows that we're engaged, that we care, and can be shown to the student body at the end of the year
  - Proposal: "All senators should be required to have measurably and successfully completed at least one project to be considered for eligibility in a subsequent election for any position within the Senate. Adherence to and fulfillment of this requirement shall be charged unto the Senate Oversight Committee, in conjunction with the designated Advisor to the Senate and, ultimately, in cooperation with the Vice President and Elections Committee to determine effects on eligibility."
- Implementation:

- o Requires additional check-ins with the Oversight Committee – accountability, support
- Do we have to finish the project report before elections? (Sen. Moore)
  - o That would make sense to a degree. Hopefully within the course of the semester, it makes sense to formulate projects to fit that deadline.
- So it can be an in-progress report too? (Sen. Moore)
  - o It's case-by-case. Working with the Oversight Committee and Executive Board will be helpful to determine the details. I'd hope we have some kind of attainable project to be completed by March.
- What is a project and how does the fluidity of it go with the committees and what Senators accomplish? (Sen. Paumier)
  - o I can't give a clear cut definition of what a project is – that's something we need to talk about. Conceptualizing what a project is is important. The scope or capability of any Senator is different – people have different passions about what they want to do, so we want to make this an equitable policy by finding common ground. For example, we can find shared characteristics to make sure projects are measurable, attainable.
- What's to stop the Oversight Chair from exercising discretionary power in a way that's more selective? And do you see a problem in that this power is given to a person who is not elected by the student body, but appointed? (Ryan Thoms, proxy for Sen. Kasper)
  - o That's why they'd work with the advisor and this is where it's different than dismissal, it's a stipulation for candidacy. I don't see a unilateral way to enforce this, and I think it's important to have an active role of the Oversight Committee along with the advisor and along with the Elections Committee. Having a multilateral approach might help address that.
- What about non-Senators who run for elected positions? (Sen. Mathias)
  - o That's where we need to be clear – there's nothing in the Constitution or Bylaws that says Senators need to do projects in their duties. There's more crystallization in the committees, but any student can join a committee and take on a project. If someone's in a job for a year and they have nothing to show for it, should they still be in that job? And this would apply to Senate, not Executive Board.
  - o But for non-Senators running campaigns (Sen. Mathias)
  - o It's about showing that you can be held to these standards and have something to show for it after being in the position for a year.
- In regards to completing a project – what's your idea in terms of assisting on events and how much of that would count? (VP Gallagher)
  - o I think it's important that Senators take the initiative but I don't see why we can't all take on a project and ask for help in it. Cooperation is essential in terms of bigger projects.
- In terms of giving power to the Oversight Committee, would it be possible to give more discretionary power to Senate? (Sen. Joglekar)
  - o For any of this, we'd have to decide on it. The whole point of Oversight Committee is that they shouldn't be biased, so they should be able to take charge of the initial enforcement of this, but we should all be unbiased in terms of carrying our weight for the people who elected us. Putting that on all of us could be contentious but we should consider it.

~Senate breaks into caucuses to discuss~

Thoughts:
- Thoughts from Jeromy: 1) What happens if you are a freshman and don't run at all until Senior Year – who will measure your success/prove what you've accomplished? 2) Is there going to be clear criteria, a system set up? 3) If we have a voting student body, shouldn't some of this be left in the hands of the constituents to determine if we've completed our projects, rather than solely with ASUP?
- I definitely think there needs to be some sort of structure in terms of accountability. I noticed that as a Senator for two years, there were some that accomplished great projects but others that did literally nothing, and there was no enforcement and there was a lack of accountability in terms of moving forward and getting reelected. The only problem I have is tying this in with elections, I think that gets tricky. I don't know what the answer is now, but I think there needs to be something in the Constitution and Bylaws about projects and accountability (Dir. Burks)
- I was never a Senator but I was a coordinator for one year and transitioned to assistant director and I wish I could've been a coordinator for two years because I learned from the mistakes I made and could've learned even more. I think it makes sense to give Senators the opportunity to learn from their mistakes and run again. Also increasing accountability is important (Dir. Sullivan)
- I think we need to be careful about our language in terms of completion of a project – progress might be better and measured. I also think there needs to be some sort of check and balance with the Oversight Committee (VP Gallagher)
- I agree that there should be more accountability for different projects, but I see a slippery slope in mixing it with elections in any way (Dir. Wester)
- I think maximizing our efficiency as an organization is in line with our values and mission. Two perspectives coming from my experience as a Senator and equity: 1) Keep in mind that the Oversight Committee isn't paid. Their responsibility is to check-in on office hours and sit-in on meetings, but these students are volunteering their time. 2) Making sure that there are more checks in place in terms of elections, so that a student who is doing work is not being targeted unfairly due to biases within Senate. However we decide eligibility concerns, they should be strongly defined (Pres. Nath)
- We should put this in context in terms of the Senate stipend and it's good that we're talking about transparency and accountability. This is a specific type of job – it's elected and paid, so it's tricky. I think that changing the Bylaws is a really important conversation (Advisor Tyler Zimmerman)
- We are elected by the student body. It is not on us to place limitations in terms of who the student body can elect. As part of these changes, we must change how the Oversight Committee works, is selected, and how it's involved with Senate. I thought there was only one person on the committee – a lot of Senate doesn't know about it. I'd want to avoid bureaucratic red-tape paperwork with this resolution – have Senators work with Oversight Committee at the beginning of the year and then work with an advisor and Speaker of the Senate over the year (Sen. Taylor)

- The spirit of the resolution is a very good thing – we talk a lot that people care about accountability and transparency. What this student government lacks is both those things. I think we work hard to do it but nobody knows what we do. People don't know what happens in Senate. Having people document the projects they're doing creates real transparency about what this organization does. This creates actual accountability and transparency to complete projects so that future Senates and constituents know what we did and we have something to show from our time in Senate (Sen. Krigger)

- The spirit of the resolution is great but there's a philosophical problem – the student body is supposed to decide who they want to represent them, but there is a lack of information about ASUP in what they do. This discretion would be best to leave it to Executive Board to decide (Ryan Thoms, proxy for Sen. Kasper)

- If we want to use Executive Board in any capacity, we need to further decide what it is they do. Tying this not explicitly to eligibility makes the most sense. We can have meetings where you have to report on what you did (Sen. Musquiz)

- I think the idea of avoiding red-tape is ludicrous because there is so little accountability. There's not a lot that we are constitutionally required to do. There's not a lot of red-tape that exists (Sen. Krigger)

- There's just a form that we fill out and that doesn't seem like enough for accountability (Sen. Moore)

- I think the word project needs to be defined, because some of our main roles are meeting with administration and transferring important information, but that doesn't necessarily fall under the word project and there's not always a start and end date (Sen. Millett)

- It's important that we're keeping ourselves accountable, whether that's a form that we fill out or something, but it's tricky when we bring that into elections because you may have worked on a project but it didn't turn out to be a success. The language is an issue (Sen. Mayer)

- You should already be talking to your constituents anyway and you're all on committees, so we should be trying to do something. Not all projects are created equal and we may need to further define what a project is, but I think we need to change "measurably and successfully completed" to "measurably completed on ____ timeframe" (VP Gallagher)

- I think we should take projects out of the language because it's hard to define. We could change it to have Senators meet with Oversight Committee and fill out a form and then define the details of the checks and balances process (Sen. Joglekar)

- We'll continue this conversation next week. Please respond about meeting with me – I've reached out several times and have met with less than half of you (Speaker Boos)
